According to information given to The Jerusalem Post, the incident began at 6:15 a.m. when Eli Azulai, 50, of Jerusalem, walked into the Mahane Yahuda police post, which also serves his Haga unit as a base. Azulai signed for an Uzi submachinegun. Carrying the weapon, Azulai left the post and crossed Jaffa Street. At the corner of Rehov Yehudit, he spotted his commander, Capt. Ben-Naim, getting out of a private car. Azulai opened fire, fatally wounding the officer, The Post was told.

Azulai thereupon backtracked and returned to the post, it was reported. At the police post he fired at another officer, named only as "Victor," but missed, inadvertently hitting two of his fellow soldiers, Hevion Ben-Horin and Kalman Friedman.

Azulai was overpowered and disarmed by other soldiers in the building, but succeeded in escaping his captors, fleeing down one of the market's alleyways, sources told

Sadat: Boycott of Egypt to be 'history' by next year

CAIRO (AP). — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat predicted yesterday that the Arab boycott of Egypt over the peace treaty with Israel "will all be history" by next year.

The Egyptian leader, speaking to a group of approximately 100 U.S. and Egyptian businessmen in his countryside rest house north of Cairo, said that despite the "shouting" of Arab opponents Egypt would not be swayed from seeking peace.

He added that despite the break in diplomatic relations by 17 Arab nations and Iran "we shall continue to give the peace process every momentum possible — every day if

Sadat compared the five-week-old Arab boycott with a military and economic embargo by the Soviet Union following the 1973 Middle East

Even though Egypt's economy was "below zero" and 90 per cent of his trade was with the Soviets, Sadat said "I fought my battle and won." Frank Considing, co-chairman of the U.S.-Egypt Business Council, told Sadat that there was "some concern" by potential investors about

Egyptian businesses that wished to do business with the Arab world, Sadat responded that "we shall face our fate and we shall fight our battle...but I think all this even if it accelerates this year, by next year it will all be history."

reporters after the meeting. Included in the delegation were some representatives from bigname U.S. firms such as Coca-Cola. Pepsico, Anoco, Allis-Chalmers, National Can and General Electric. Some businessmen said privately, however, that doubts remained about how far the Arab opponents of the peace treaty would go with economic sanctions. They are particularly concerned that joint U.S.-Egyptian ventures would be banned from exporting to the Arab world and that parent firms might also be boycotted. However, Considine said that the "signals we are getting indicate these things are not planned" and he said he did not believe they would be

No headway for Begin's immigration plan

by asher wallfish Post Knesset Reporter

Prime Minister Menahem Begin made no headway yesterday in drumming up support for his plan to put the Jewish Agency instead of the Absorption Ministry in charge of immigrant absorption. He advocated the switch at two separate meetings in the Knesset building.

In the Knesset Immigration and Absorption Committee, which is chaired by his vociferous critic. Geula Cohen, a large majority merged for maintaining the Absorption Ministry in its present form.

This majority backed the views of Absorption Minister (and now Housing Minister) David Levy, who belongs to the same Herut party as Cohen and Begin.

Levy, who spoke at the committee meeting, said he would refuse to head the planned absorption authority, if it were set up — as Begin has already asked — if the authority did not get responsibility for carrying out the work of absorption. Begin wants the agency's absorption department to be responsible for carrying out the work. Levy said the Jewish Agency already failed once at the task of absorption, and that the new plan would lead to a repetition of that

Later, in a meeting of the Herut wing of the Likud, Begin encountered still stiffer opposition. He rebuked the Herut wing for presuming to summon the meeting to discuss the issue, saying it had no right to do so, and no status in the matter of transferring administrative reponsibilities. "This province should be left to the government alone," Begin said. Begin said that if Levy wanted to appeal the government's plan to give absorption back to the Jewish Agency, he should have done so months ago, when the idea first emerged.

At this, Levy interrupted briefly to point out that he was not appealing now either. Apart from that comment, he did not utter one word at the Herut meeting.

Several Herut MKs said they opposed putting the Jewish Agency in charge of absorption again, because the government and the Knesset would be prevented from exercising proper supervision.
Then, firebrand Geula Cohen opened a loud onslaught on Begin, accusing him of trying to browbeat his fellow Herut members, so as to put them on the defensive, and blunt their criticism of his policies.

"Why do you come here to rebuke us?" she asked the premier. "I am not rebuking anybody. Take that word back," Begin snapped back.

"I shall not take anything back. You do it all the time," she went on. This annoyed coalition chairman Haim Corfu, who interrupted her to ask: "Since when do we need you to Cohen: "I have done more for Zionist education than all your Herut movement put together. I left home at the age of 16 to join the underground. And anyway, Corfu. why do you serve as Begin's keeper of the seal? Why do you serve as his lightning conductor? He can take care of Corfu: "What did you do in the underground anyway? All you did was talk. You were only a radio announcer, after all. I was out there planting mines and booby traps while you were talking."

Cohen: "That's not true, I went out on operations. I was wounded. I was taken prisoner and tried and imprisoned. I did my bit. How low can vou sink. Corfu?

The Herut wing agreed not to hold a vote on the absorption issue but instead to wait till after today's toplevel meeting between Cabinet representatives and Jewish Agency

Arafat vows to storm Begin office

BEIRUT. - Yasser Arafat yesterday vowed a prolonged war against Israel that would end only when PLO terrorists overrun Prime Minister Menahem Begin's offices in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv. Speaking at a hideout south of Beirut. Arafat also urged foreign ministers of Islamic countries meeting in the Morocoan town of Fez to take collective sanctions against the U.S. The chairman of the Palestine

Liberation Organization accused Israel of using American-made cluster bombs against Palestinian and Lebanese targets in three days of air raids in Northern and Southern Lebanon. Arafat lashed at Begin's statement that Jerusalem was Israel's eternal capital. "I am confident that we shall eventually overrun Begin's own offices. Jerusalem is destined to be the eternal capital of our sovereign, independent Palestinian state under the PLO leadership,"

He said Palestinians were ready to defend oil-rich Arab states against any American military intervention and that he was confident all Arab oilfields would be set ablaze before the U.S. could stage any landing in the Persian Gulf region.

Arafat described Sadat as "the traitor who landed at history's garbage lot" and said he was certain a young Egyptian army officer would soon overthrow the regime.

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — The ten-day visit by the 6,000 sailors of the U.S. Sixth Fleet's aircraft carrier USS Elsenhower and escort freighter USS South Carolina is turning into a love affair. Haifa residents have taken the men to their hearts and many to their homes for coffee or a family meal, and the warmth is reciprocated.

Only the professional purveyors of love are disappointed. The girls still have their legs crossed, as it were. They are hoping that business, which has been "more than disappointing" so far, will pick up as the memory of the girls the sailors left behind in Naples wears off.

No-one has an explanation for the saliors' apparent lack of interest in prostitutes, and the few dozen who came to town from Tel Aviv when the ships arrived last Friday have already returned.

On the other hand, the influx of 6,000 drinking men has meant something of a revival for the port-side bars. Even bars that usually only open at noon are welcoming sailors starting in the early morning.

A group of the men were already at a small waterside drinking place early yesterday morning, enjoying bottle after bottle of local beer, chased by an occasional bourbon.

Speaking in a variety of American accents, the men appeared to find the little pub an excellent place to get together and swap ship and shore experiences from ports of call all over the world.

then sat smoking a quiet cigarette. "The shore patrol doesn't drink when on duty," the barmaid, who has become an expert on U.S. navy practice, explained.

The two ships have a 150-man shore patrol whose patrolling was coordinated with the Israel police.

Police spokesman Ady Gonen told The Jerusalem Post that , the 6,000 men have been "no trouble at all." Five days after their arrival there had not been a single incident, with the exception of one man who was lightly injured in a traffic accident.

The port management has allocated the two nuclear-powered ships, which are both anchored in the bay, mainquay space for a landing stage, from which they operate a regular round-the-clock ship-toshore launch service.

The men spend most of their time sightseeing throughout the country, enjoying Haifa and sampling the city's beer and restaurants, and carefully considering how best to vitations to local homes are especially appreciated, giving them their first family meal after months of eating only ship or restaurant food. Most of the men come ashore in civilian clothes.

They make no secret about how much they love Israeli friendliness which they say, is a great change compared to many other ports, where American navy men "are welcomed only for the money they can rip off us."

At the port exit used by the men taxis stand in line and youngsters swap visored hats and momentos for Israeli souvenirs with the sailors. Tonight at 5:30, the Sixth Fleet band which has come with the ships will entertain Haifa residents at the Gan Ha'em park on Mount Carmel. Tomorrow morning the ships will put out to sea for a display of American naval power, to be watched by Premier Menshem Begin and 450 invited guests.

Police still seek 5 men in Bank Leumi robbery

Jerusalem Post Reporter TEL AVIV. — The police are still searching for five men involved in the hold-up at Bank Leumi in Ramat Aviv last Thursday. Police believe that two groups of people participated in the robbery: One, consisting of four men, broke into the bank, fired shots and threw grenades at bank employees and bystanders, and escaped in a Subaru car; the other group, consisting of three peo-ple, waited for their friends in another car to distract the police.

The details were revealed yesterday in the Tel Aviv magistrate's court, where the police asked for the remand of two suspects in the robbery. Contrary to previous reports, it was stated in court that the robbers escaped with IL2m. in cash and IL6m. worth of travellers' cheques. It was also discovered that the robber who was wounded during the robbery was injured in his arm and not his chest, as first reported by

The two suspects were remanded for 10 days yesterday by Judge Boris Rapoport. Police representative Inspector Rafael Bornstein called Asher Yehoshua the "brain" of the robbery and said that Yehoshua participated physically in it. But he did not clarify whether the suspect was among the four who entered the bank or was one of the others who waited in the second car. Herzl Avitan, who was arrested by the police about 20 minutes after the robbery, was called by Bornstein "a robber." A fresh scratch was found on Avitan's leg and the police believe it came from glass from the bank's broken windows. Avitan said the scratch was caused by a rock in the sea and claimed to have nothing to do with the robbery.

Seven other suspects went before the magistrate's court yesterday, all charged with aiding the robbers. Among them were three women. According to the police, one woman, Rahel Kashani, is the mother of the robber who was wounded by a oliceman who happened to be near the bank at the time of the robbery. She was released. Two other women charged with helping the robbers will remain in custody until Friday for questioning. Rivka Avitan is the sister-in-law of Hers! Avitan and her husband Aharon is also charged with being an

The other woman is Orit Arviv, who is charged with providing her friend Heral Avitan with an alibi.

The remaining suspects, all remanded for 10 days, are: Shmuel Shprintu, Salomon Kashani and Am-return of El-Arish to Egypt on May

Spokesman Hodding Carter III said that Ambassador-at-Large for the autonomy negotiations, Robert Strauss, would not be accompanying the secretary on this current visit, which is designed to demonstrate the U.S.'s determination to see the treaty implemented smoothly. The spokesman urged Israel, meanwhile, to stop its daily air raids against terrorist targets in Lebanon, insisting that the casualty toll was

At the hearing Vance said several countries have agreed to participate in economic assistance programmes for Egypt. But the secretary declined to name them, stating that it was up to those countries to do so. During extensive diplomatic contacts with the U.S., Vance said, these countries had responded "positively."

The matter of Saudi Arabia's opposition to the peace treaty dominated the hearing as conpressman after congressman pressed the two administration officials to explain the Saudi attitude. Several members who had voted in favour of the administration's F-15 aircraft sale to Saudi Arabia last year were particularly aroused by the hostile

Saudi reaction.

Vance and Brown also made several other important dis-

Regarding Lebanon, Vance deplored the shelling of the UN peacekeeping forces in the south by Maj. Saad Haddad's Christian militia forces.

Rep. Paul Findley (Republicanlilinois), who has repeatedly called for U.S. recognition of the PLO, said that the recent Palestinian terrorist raids against Israel, since the signing of the treaty, had been

Brown said Egypt plans to reduce its military expenditures by about one third in the coming years. "I think the same kind of consideration is going on in Israel." he said, noting that Israel has indicated that by 1983 it hoped to be able to reduce the amount of military assistance from

But the defence chief said it was up to Israel to make public the specifics of its planned reductions.

 Vance said that the autonomy negotiations would begin in Beersheba in about two weeks, and then alternate in location with El-Arish. The secretary declined to comment on reports of Prime Minister Menahem Begin's autonomy plan, other than to say that "both sides" could be expected to take "maximum positions" at the early stage in these negotiations. He expressed his hope and "expectation," however, that Israel and

Egypt would demonstrate flexibility as the talks continue. Vance said that suspending Egypt's membership in the Islamic conference, now opening in Fez, Morocco, would be "totally unfair, wrong and harmful." But he conceded that such an effort might take

He once again defended U.S. aid to Syria, noting that the Damascus regime still supported a comprehensive settlement based on UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. e recalled that Syria had earlier followed Egypt's footsteps in negotiating with Israel during the 1949 Rhodes armistice talks and later in the 1974 disengagement agreement on the Golan. 'I do not rule out (the possibility) that they, in the future, might join the peace process," Vance said. It was important for the U.S. to keep its 'channels of communication' open with the Syrians, he added.

As he has in the past, Vance denied that it was necessary to improve the terms of the $3b. supplemental aid package for Israel or the $1.8b. programme for Egypt. But he agreed to take another look at the onomic conditions in the two countries in one year and to report to Congress on their ability to repay the Vance warned that any reduction in the package would be a serious "body blow" to the entire peace initiative. Several members complained about the high cost to U.S. taxpayers, but passage is expected:

Rep. Millicent Fenwick and Rep. Stephen Solarz pressed the secretary to explain the reasoning for the recent visa to PLO official Shafiq el-Hout. Vance maintained, as he has in the past, that there was no administration intention to deal with the PLO in any direct way before it recognizes Israel's right to exist as well as resolutions 242 and 338. Regarding a statement last month

Assistant Secretary of State Harold Saunders that the U.S. could communicate informally with the PLO — but not recognize or negotiate with it — the secretary maintained that such informal contacts would develop only in securityrelated instances, such as when U.S. officials in Beirut are endangered.

2 no-confidence votes today in Knesset

By ASHER WALLFISH Post Knesset Reporter

Defence Minister Ezer Weizman will reply in the Knesset today to two motions of no-confidence in the government, which were presented by the Alignment and Shai factions over the release of 76 Arab terrorists in return for one Israeli reserve

Prime Minister Menahem Begin will reply to another motion of no-confidence, tabled by the Sheli faction, over the reintroduction of the death penalty for grave terror acts.

In the first two motions, spokesmen of the National Religious Party will express condemnation of the cabinet decision to free the 76 terrorists last month, although the faction is expected to support the government on the vote, in the interests of coalition loyalty.

Three NRP men tabled a private members' bill yesterday, which would compel the government in future to get the approval of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee, before freeing Arab terrorists. The bill is sponsored by MKs Yehuda Ben-Meir, Eliezei Avtabi and Benzion Rubin.

Alignment chief Shimon Peres said his faction should have a free vote on both matters, since they involved questions of conscience. He urged all other factions to permit their members the same freedom.

Details were disclosed yesterday about how the decision to free the 76 terrorists was taken. There were apparently two discussions involving seven ministers. In the first, a majority of four — Foreign Minister Moshe Dyan, Interior Minister Yosef Burg, Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon and Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir opposed the proposal by Begin and Weizman that the deal be made with Ahmed Jibril's terror group. Only Health Minister Eliezer Shostak voted for it.

At a second session, however, Sharon declared that he was prepared to be won over by the prime minister, and so the vote became four to three in favour. The considerations advanced by the premier concerned the threat to Avraham Amram's life and safety.

The 41st Annual meeting of the Hebrew University's board of governors opened last night with university rector Gidon Czapski, condemning the heads of all the country's universities for only "weakly protesting against" the massive erosion in university teachers' salaries in recent Czapski accused the Begin government, as well as the previous administration of allowing the univer-sities and scientific research in the country in general to "stagnate." And stagnation in such a context spells "death," he charged.

He compared the situation of Israel's academic institutions with those of Egypt, Syria and Iraq where, said Czapski, budgets had grown rather than diminished in real terms and where the number of students had grown annually in recent years. "We have entered a new, strange

Allegations of undue force and violence by police in the course of their duties are to be examined by a specially appointed committee consisting of one representative from the Justice Ministry and one from the police. Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir yesterday announced that he and Interior and Police Minister Yosef Burg had agreed that the committee should examine public complaints against police brutality, and would also make recommendations regarding future investigation and treatment of such complaints.

The conmittee, consisting of Tel

Aviv District Prosecutor Sarah Sirota and Police Comptroller Shmuel Eitan, is to deliver its report within a month. The two will be authorized to examine any documents they wish and take statements from any individuals connected with the issue. In reply to a question, Tamir said that the committee's inquiry would be limited to the police. Regarding the recent complaint by East Jerusalem journalist Ahmad Ismail Ajwa that he had been abused by General Security Services (Shabak) agents, Tamir said that this was the first such complaint ever made against the service.

Vatican vows to keep Capucci in line

By DAVID LANDAU

Post Diplomatic Correspondent The Vatican has renewed its pledge to Israel that Archbishop Hilarion Capucci will keep out of the Middle East and will refrain from any damaging actions against Israel. The renewed commitment was given to Israel's ambassador to Rome, Moshe Allon, by senior Vatican officials this week following Pope John Paul II's meeting with Capucci. After that meeting, Capucci was given an itinerant pastorship among the Greek-Catholic communities of Western Europe. Capucci was convicted by the Jerusalem District Court of gunrunning for the Fatah across Lebanese border and sentenced to prison. He was later freed upon his own and the Holy See's solemn assurance that he would leave the area and no longer involve himself in its political affairs. But recently the cleric appeared at a PLO conference in Damascus and later spoke publicly on behalf of the PLO during a visit to Teheran. Israel's grievance at his actions was voiced to the pope himself last month by the director-general of the Foreign Ministry, Yosef Ciechanover, during an addience. In contacts with the Vatican this week, the Israeli envoy was reassured that the Holy See remained "aware of" the commitments given regarding Capucci at the time of his release.

Settlers won't cooperate with shooting inquiries

By Joshua Brilliant Jerusalem Poet Reperter

Jewish West Bank settlers said yesterday they will not cooperate with police investigating shooting incidents in which they are involved because the army abandons them to attacks by Arab stonethrowers.

Rafi Ben-Bassat, who was inolved in a clash with Arab demonstrators at Bir Zeit on Independence Day, told a press conerence organized by the Council of Jewish Settlements in Judea. Samaria and Gaza: 'This is just like the (British) Mandate days, Arab rioters attack, the army stands off, and the police investigates diligently." The settlers maintained they fired into the air, in strict accordance with standing military government instruction

Yoram Adler of Ma'alch Adumim described how soldiers at a military roadblock near Beit El had only warned motorists who were in danger of being stoned to close their car windows. When his car was attacked near the Jalaxun refugee camp, Adler complained, the soldiers refused to accompany him in pursuit of the offenders

A few minutes later the policemen drove off, so Adler and his friends entered the village, "approached the building (from where the stones were allegedly thrown), picked up stones and smashed a few windows.

A written statement by the council quoted soldiers as having said on March 12, when a bus was attacked: We will be court-martialled if we even fire warning shots."
The Defence Ministry and IDF

spokesmen-declined to comment. The settlers also revealed that the military government had issued them with arms. Ben-Bassat said he was given new bullets after he had emptied his magazine at the Bir Zeit

Standing instructions, say the settlers may fire into the air when stoned, Ben-Bassat reported. In grave danger, they may shoet at the attackers legs, Yitzhak Sapir of Ma aleh Adumim added. Ben-Bassat repeatedly denied having shot anyone or seen anyone hit at the Bir Zeit incident, where iniversi-ty student Ra'ed Daoud was struck in the chest by a bullet.

TA plans crackdown on illegal building

By JUDY SIEGEL. lem Post Reporter

Marseilles, Brussels, Basle, Colorado Springs, Mexico City and over 40 other foreign cities will name streets and squares "Jerusalem" in honour of Jerusalem Day on May 24. In coordination with the govern-ment and the Jerusalem Municipality, the World Zionist Organization is attempting for the first time to establish Jerusalem Day — marking the reunification of the city 12 years. ago — as an accepted Jewish holiday in the Diaspora.

Activities will take place in 205 cities spread across 24 countries around the world, according to WZO Executive chairman Arye Dulzin, who spoke to reporters yesterday. In addition, some cities will send gifts of books to the Jerusalem municipal library, encourage Jewish families to display symbols of Jerusalem and organize assemblies. The WZO views the effort as urgent in the light of coming diplomatic steps which will demand that the unity of Jerusalem as Israel's capital be stressed.

Hebron squatters will not budge; vow to 'wipe out shame of 1929'

By IAN BLACK

Jerusalem Post Reporter The women and children from Kiryat Arba who have been occupying the old Hadassah building in Hebron for the last two weeks plan to offer "passive resistance" to any attempt to evacuate them and have sworn not to return to Kiryat Arba. A spokesman for the group, Miriam Levinger, wife of Rabbi Moshe Levinger, yesterday told The Jerusalem Post that she and the others — some 20 women and 30 children — had come to "wipe out good deal of property behind.) Leaning out of a barred first floor window overlooking the busy street below - and often shouting to overcome the roar of passing traffic -Levinger asserted that as long as Jewish presence in the area was confined to Kiryat Arba, such a massacre could happen again. If the women were forcibly evacuated, she said, they would stay put "wherever they put us" to reestablish a Jewish presence in the Three of the women in the building are in advanced stages of pregnancy and it would be difficult to make them leave without endangering their health. No decision on evacuating them is likely before next Sunday's cabinet meeting, The Post learned yesterday from well-informed sources. Th demonstrators had been told they would be moved out at 4 p.m. on Monday, but the deadline passed without any action taken. There seemed little chance vesterday that the women would respond to Prime Minister Menahem Begin's appeal earlier this week to end their cupation of the building.

Levinger, occasionally breaking into her native English to make a point, insisted that she had nothing fear from the Arabs of Hebron (who are furious over what they consider a provocative demonstration). She said that she used to be more afraid on the streets of New York.

Security measures were heavy around the dilapidated building yesterday; all photography was forbidden. Levinger and a number of other women interrupted their dialogue with The Post occasionally to greet well-wishers from Jerusalem and Kiryat Arba.

One woman from Jerusalem, who brought a package of toys to help occupy the children inside the building, described the sit-in as "a wonderful act" and blew kisses at the toddlers peeping out of the windows.

The occupants are supplied with food once a day from Kiryat Arba and have showers, a refrigerator, mattresses, curtains and a chemical toilet. The military government gives them water. Last week an American tourist contributed IL15, 000 towards their upkeep.

On the other hand, one Kiryat Arba source revealed, school books and film for cameras are not allowed into the building. The prohibition against film, the source suspected. was to prevent the printing of a commemorative album, whatever the final outcome of the Hadassah sit-in.

Gaza mayor due to meet Arafat

yesterday for Jordan, Syria and Lebanon. During his trip, he is expected to meet with Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat to discuss the forthcoming autonomy negotiations between Egypt and Israel.

Shawwa has been the only leader in the administered territories to express qualified support for President Anwar Sadat's peace initiative. He has also been careful to remain on good terms with both Jordan and the PLO.

The mayor's visit, coming on the eve of the autonomy talks (due to open on May 27) could be of extreme importance in deciding the future of the scheme.

If Shawwa does agree to par ticipate in the talks, it would be a first step towards what many observers have been predicting will be their eventual outcome - the implementation of autonomy in the Gaza Strip only.

The mayor's daughter, who is currently in Gaza on a visit from England, said that her father expected to be away between a week and 10 days. She described her father's mood as "pessimistic."

Milk drivers put the squeeze on Haifa

By MARY HIRSCHFELD Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Milk distribution in Haifa, which has been scrappy for the past few weeks, stopped altogether yesterday. Drivers refused to deliver because the local Tnuva dairy could supply them with only 20 per cent of the usual quantity.

Thuva spokesman Mordechai Hofstaetter told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that the shortage was due to sanctions by the 13 workers at the dairy's filling department. They started a slow-down over a month ago, when their demands for higher salaries and bonus payments were rejected by Tnuva management. Hofstaetter explained that dis-

Quiet negotiations are under way to set up a meeting between Finance Minister Simha Ehrlich and Histadrut Secrefary-General Yeroham Meshel, after the two verbally clashed last week.

The Jerusalem Post has learned that the meeting could take place late this week, after Meshel returns from Brussels. He leaves today for the Belgian capital where he is to attend a conference as vice-president of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The Histadrut will most likely ask " Ehrlich to revamp tax brackets from a 70 per cent linkage to inflation, to a 100 per cent linkage. It will also ask for tax cuts for increased worker productivity.

For its part, the labour federation appears ready to agree to a Treasury demand for special con tracts for workers, especially in the tax collection service.

and it was supported by the Likud, the Democratic Movement, Shai and Agudat Yisrael. It was opposed by the Alignment, the Democratic Front, and Shell. Yesterday's discussion grewout of a motion for the agenda presented last December by Badian on the linkage of the salaries of nonengineers to those of engineers. Badian is a former president of the Engineers Union. The resolution he presented yesterday noted that the Barkai Committee, jointly appointed in October 1975 by the government and the Histadrut, found that wage linkage was formally introduced in Israel in April 1956, when teachers' salaries were linked to those of the engineers. From that modest beginning, the wages of 225,610 public workers were linked to some other group by May 1976, when the Barksi Committee submitted its report. (By now, Ba-dian said, the figure has risen to Yesterday's resolution also noted that the Barkai Committee called the practice of wage linkage "undesirable both from the economic viewpoint and from the social." The resolution further noted that when the committee was appointed, both the government and the Histadrut undertook to implement its recommendations.

"The Knesset states with regret that this undertaking has not been carried out and the formal linkage procedure in wage agreements in the public service still prevails and has even grown," the resolution It further blamed the linkage system for the "shattered" labour relations in the public service, which the worker's contribution to the place of work and to the economy. Histadrut Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel (Alignment-Labour), speaking in the debate, pooh-poohed Badian's denunciation of wage linkage as dealing with a mere "technical" matter. Linkage or non-linkage could solve nothing, certainly not at a time of galloping inflation, he said. Meshel said that he would never accept the argument — if it should be advanced by the government — that it was unwilling to give the engineers a pay rise because groups linked to the engineers would then demand the same. But, on the other hand, the Engineers Union had no right to prevent other unions from winning the

Iran execution record: 21 shot

TEHERAN (Reuter). -- Iranian firing squads set a grim record with the execution yesterday of 21 of the ousted shah's officials, more than in any one day since the February

The "Voice of the Islamic Republic" radio said that the condemned men, who were shot at dawn, had been found guilty by secret revolutionary courts of "waging war on God and being the corrupt of the earth," as well as torture and taking part in massacres.

Their deaths brought the total number of political executions since the overthrow of the monarchy to

Among those executed were former Majlis (lower house of parliament) speaker Jaavad Sa'eed and Brigadier-General Ali Fathi Amin, a former tank division commander.

The radio said that the general was responsible for the "Battle of 24th Esfano Square" here last January, in which more than 100 anti-shah demonstrators were reported killed.

Sa'eed, 57, in addition to being speaker of the Majlis, was the last secretary-general of the disbanded Rashtakhiz (Resurgence) Party, the sole political party permitted under

Others who were shot included two former information ministers. Gholam Reza Kianpour and Mohammad Reza Amali Teherani; 15 agents of the shah's hated Savak secret police; an army colonel, and a

The radio said that their trials began before three separate courts on Monday morning and ended at midnight Monday.

In a speech published after the executions, Iran's unofficial head of state, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, said that all those opposed to the Islamic revolution could be exterminated by the Iranian nation in half a day, if he allowed this to happen. The statement was apparently directed equally at right-wing and left-wing opponents of Iran's new rulers. The warning coincided with signs of a deepening rift between left-wing and Islamic supporters of the revolution. For the first time, the pro-Soviet Tudeh (communist) Party yesterday openly attacked the government of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan, accusing it of siding with capitalists and deviating from the revolutionary path.

In Moscow yesterday, Iran's new ambassador to the Kremlin justified the execution of former officials of the deposed shah, comparing them to Nazi war criminals.

Ambassador Mohammad Mokri. meeting journalists for the first time since he arrived to represent the new Islamic government in Teheran, said that there had been fewer deaths in Iran than in most countries which had undergone a revolution. "Although 34 years have passed since the end of World War II, Nazi war criminals are still punished. This is the same." he said when asked about the executions.

Professor Mokri, who taught for 25 years at the University of Paris

while in exile as an opponent of the shah, was speaking in the ornate sur-roundings of the Iranian Embassy in Moscow, where portraits of the shah have been replaced with pictures of Khomeini and former premier Mohammad Mossadegh, under whom the ambassador served as deputy culture minister in the early

There was a bright future for relations between Iran and the Soviet Union, the ambassador said. He had his first meeting on Monday with Foreign Minister Andrei

The Soviet Union made extensive efforts to cultivate good relations with the shah, but condemned him as a tyrant when his regime collapsed and he left the country.

The ambassador said that the Soviet Union would continue to receive gas from Iran by pipeline, including extra supplies to compen-sate for a cutoff last winter during the revolution, which seriously disrupted heat and power in the Soviet

But he said that plans for a second pipeline to carry gas to the USSR in a "swap" deal with Western Europe were still being reviewed.

All economic, technical and cultural relations with Moscow inherited from the shah's regime would be given a limited review with a view to improving them, he said. In particular the ambassador indicated that a planned expansion of a Soviet-built steel mill in Isfahan was likely to go ahead, partly to help provide more jobs.

Ugandans will be taught how to live without Amin

NAIROBI (AP). — Uganda's new provisional government has abolished all "oppressive laws" that existed under the regime of deposed President Idi Amin and has announced a nationwide campaign to apprise citizens of their human and civil rights under the new government, Radio Uganda said yesterday. Wadada Nabudere, minister of justice and secretary for the commission of political affairs of the Ugandan National Liberation Front (UNLF), told a rally in the city of Mbale on Sunday that the chief aim of the new government is to reestablish the rule of law in the East African nation.

All oppressive laws that existed under the Amin government, he said, are now nuli and vold.

According to the Uganda Radio broadcast monitored here, the provisional government of the UNLF, headed by President Yusufu Lule, plans to embark on a special campaign to educate Ugandans on their rights and obligations under the new government.

International human rights organizations estimate that between 50,000 and 800,000 people were killed in Uganda during the eight-year reign of Amin — victims of political and tribal purges by the govern-

Kreisky majority pared by absentee ballots

VIENNA (Reuter). - Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's nineseat overall majority in Sunday's general elections has been cut by two after the counting of absentee ballots, the government announced yesterday.

The main opposition, the Conservative Peoples' Party, picked up one more seat to give it 77.

The Socialists, now with 95 seats, still have a comfortable seven-seat majority over the combined strength of the Peoples' Party and the rightist-liberal Freedom Party, which remains with 11 seats.

On deck, the refugees huddled under the shade of a missile launching pad and canvas stretched over the bassy and UN officials took the first steps that will probably lead to the group's resettlement in the U.S. Below, a two-day-old refugee born at sea cried inside an incubator improvised out of carboard boxes by the ship's doctor.

The 4,000-ton frigate, on a routine cruise from Singapore, was quickly converted to a floating relief centre. 'It was a humanitarian gesture. We are bound by maritime law to help those in distress at sea," Commander William Mathis, the Peary's skipper, told reporters. Mathis, a Vietnam veteran, said the 16-metre refugee boat was spotted last Saturday about 125 kilometres off Malaysia. Besides a carpet of humanity from bow to stern, the American navy men found only one bag of rice, no fuel and a limited water supply. There were also two women nine months pregnant, several people already suffering from dehydration, the two-day-old boy and his sick mother.

At least 10 persons died in a fire at Manchester's Woolworth store yesterday and another 57, including four firemen, were taken to hospital, police reported. Firemen were still working in the five-floor building in the centre of the city yesterday evening and had to get through to the top floor before a final casualty list could be drawn up. The building was crowded when the fire broke out in the furniture department. Shoppers and staff trapped in the building rushed to the roof where they were rescued by firemen with ladders. Over 100 firemen fought the blaze all afternoon while a fleet of 18 ambulances ferried the injured to three nearby hospitals. The cause of the blaze had not yet been determined.

Turco-U.S. talks on future of bases said inconclusive

ANKARA (Reuter). - A special envoy of President Carter left yesterday after inconclusive talks with government officials on the future of U.S. bases in Turkey.

Retention of the bases is considered in Washington as vital for monitoring Soviet compliance with the projected new strategic arms limitation (SALT II) agreement. Premier Bulent Ecevit said after meeting the envoy, Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher, that the U.S. had still not responded to Turkish demands including economic and military conditions. Christopher had four hours of hard bargaining with the premier after flying in on Monday night. A further hour of unscheduled talks yesterday appeared to reflect disagreement over the Turkish demands.

President Carter, who sent a special message to Ecevit through Christopher, is anxious to obtain a solid agreement on the U.S. bases. including the setting up of two sophisticated scanning stations, to encourage congressional approval of the SALT II accord.

Following the fall of the shah in Iran, where the U.S. used to menicar. Soviet movements, the bases in Turkey have taken on added importance as the last remaining U.S. listening posts with access to the southern Soviet Union.

Reports from Washington yesterday said that after clearing the last obstacles to the treaty, U.S. and Soviet officials were considering site and date for a summit at which it would be signed. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance

Dobrynin met twice on Monday to settle the final substantive issues in SALT II after six and a half years of GENEVA (AP). - The U.S., seemingly reacting to reported new Arab moves to restrict both Egyptian and Israeli membership in the World Health Organization, yesterday warned against "rash actions" which it said could do "irreparable harm" to the UN agency.

U.S. chief delegate Joseph A. Califano urged the annual assembly of the 151-nation WHO not to allow 'irrelevant political battles" to hinder the work of the organization. Califano, U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said the organization had only flourished since its establishment 31 years ago because it had been "free of extraneous political battles - battles irrelevant to the mission of the Califano said it was "imperative" for states not to violate this principle during the current session, which opened on Monday.

"If these disputes concern health matters, we can discuss them here. But I urge...that we avoid rash actions that can do irreparable harm to the World Health Organization." Meanwhile, in Manila, developing

SAN SALVADOR (Reuter). — The Costa Rican ambassador and four of his staff were freed on Monday night after being held hostage in their em-

There was confusion over the circumstances of their release. A police spokesman said they were freed unharmed by three gunmen who had held them hostage since

They're so honest it hurts

CHICAGO (AP). — The U.S. government has sent Walter and Alvina Janczewski thousands of dollars in Social Security cheques since 1974. They wish it would stop.

They say the money isn't rightfully theirs - but they can't seem to convince the government to stop sending it.
The U.S. Social Security Administration apparently goofed on April 28, 1974, when Walter Janczewski routinely visited the office on his 65th birthday to apply for Medicare. He told them he didn't want any regular Social Security checks, and he continued to work at U.S. Steel Corporation as a photocopier.

But the retirement checks began coming anyway.

And Janczewski and his wife have been getting them five or six times a year ever since.

Last year, the government gave them $2,884 and during the past five years, Mrs. Janczewski estimates the government sent them about $7. 000 in error. At the end of each year, they sent a certified cheque back to Uncle Sam. They've kept a file of all the cheques and correspondence with the government.

"It's getting to be a pain in the you know what," she said on Monday. "It's no use going there and it's no use calling them. Five years, Don't you think by now they would know what they were doing in that Social Security office?"

The Vatican said the same was true for the entire chapter included in a book published by Rizzoli, the publisher which owns "Corriere Della Sera," the newspaper which carried the article on its front page as an advance excerpt.

The article dealt with various problems, from terrorism to the hard life of workers. "I myself, the

Monarch in the middle

By GORDON MACLEAN/Mbabane

THE MINIATURE monarchy of Swaziland is finding itself increasingly involved in a tug-of-war between Rast and West.

The opposing forces are not only geographical but ideological. To the east, Marxist Mozambique is trying to wean the 6,700-square-mile state closer to its own political doctrines, while to the west, South Africa is doing all it can to keep Swaziland within its fold.

So far the autocratic ruler of halfa-million Swazis, King Sobhuza II, has succeeded in keeping his subjects firmly within South Africa's orbit, for he tolerates no suggestions of democracy trying to alter the longestablished pattern.

Indeed, Swaziland is proud of the fact that Sobhuza has reigned longer than any other living monarch — 58 years. In 1973, the King suspended the Swazi constitution and banned all political parties because he suddenly decided that Westminster-type democracy was not suitable for his people, but that his direct rule was better. In place of parliament he substituted a king of tribal council, known as the Tinkundhia, composed of representatives chosen last year from each district - and then approved by the King.

So far no new constitution has yet been framed. It is said that the King's advisers are still combing the world to find a model constitution which Swaziland can adapt to fit its own peculiar situation — where the King is an absolute monarch.

MANY LOYAL Swazis argue vehemently that their deep-rooted traditions are strong enough to prevent despotism and defend the ruling that Western-style democracy is not for them. But this is not the view held by many university students, or in the urban areas of Mbabane-Manzini when young people meet to discuss their country's future.

Because of Sobhuza's advancing age, there is much discussion of which of his many sons — all royal princes, many in important government posts - he will choose as his successor. Only a select few advisers are in his confidence. His most powerful confident is said to be his commander-in-chief (and son-inlaw), Prime Minister and Maj.-Gen. Maphevu, who has the small but well-trained army under his thumb.

The man who leads the movement to put a "peoples" government" in power in place of the monarchy is today a "non-person" in Swaziland. Dr. Ambrose Swane, who once led the opposition Nawane National Liberatory Congress, is an exile in neighbouring Mozambique since es-caping after one of his several periods of detention.

His party has now been revived as the Swaziland Liberation Movement, which abbreviates into "Swalimo" with more than a hint that it has something in common with Marxist Frelimo). From Maputo, leaflets in the Si-Swati language are smuggled back home with inflammatory messages and dire warnings to Maphevu, whose soldiers have a eputation for thuggery.

Just how many supporters Swalimo now has in Swaziland is uncertain, for most Swazis deny all knowledge of the movement or its aims. The news media are forbidden to make any reference to it, or to its exiled leader.

Iron ore, asbestos and sugar yield significant revenue, but much of the semaining wealth comes to Swaziland every weekend from the hordes of white South Africans who drive from Johannesburg and Durban to taste the "forbidden fruits" Swaziland has to offer.

Main attractions are the "one-arm bandits," the roulette wheels and blackjack tables of the two casinos, the hard-core porn films and the sexy magazines, not to mention the general permissiveness that includes sex across the colour line when the Mbabane Vice Squad is looking the other way. The beautiful Ezulweni Valley between Mbabane and Matsapa International Airport, irreverently dubbed "Sin-Valley" or "Go-go Valley," has two Holiday Inns and the Swazi Spa Casino, with a fringe of garish nightclubs and discos that swing until dawn. All this brings a golden glow to "Sheba's Breasts." as the rocky prominences on the hills above have been known since author Rider Haggard passed that way years ago.

- and with it the ruling that no Swazi may own land individually — its ties with South Africa are guaranteed, even although the Swazis resent being regarded as inhabitants of "just another Bantustan."

Israel national cricket team leaves for World Cup in London

By JACK LEON Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Israel's 16-man national cricket team leaves for London tomorrow to participate in the qualifying competition for the second Prudential World Cup. The tournament, which is being contested by 14 associate members of the International Cricket Conference (ICC), takes place in the English midlands from May 22 to June 4.

The Israelis start the competition with two points under their belt before a ball has been bowled, following Sri Lanka's announcement last month that it will not play its scheduled first-round match against Israel on June 4. The organizing, committee awarded the game to Israel by default, but Sri Lanka is still being allowed to play its other fixtures in the opening round.

Gibraltar, another entry drawn in Israel's five-nation qualifying group, had earlier pulled out of the meet because of team-selection difficulties. With Sri Lanka's surprise action, the Israelis are thus now left with only two opponents, the U.S.

TA lifeguards strike at peak hours

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Thousands of Tel Aviv bathers are risking their lives when they enter the water during the afternoons and Saturdays, manager of municipal services Pinhas Lahav said yesterday. The lifeguards stand firm in their refusal to work after 2 p.m. on weekdays and all day Satur-days, and negotiations have reached a standstill, Lahav said. Tel Aviv's 14 beaches opened of-ficially last week with full beach services, cabin facilities and showers. But the water remains off bounds by law when no lifeguard is on duty.

In the interests of safety, city inspectors have been sent to the beaches to "chase people out of the water," Lahav said.

In other American League action, Butch Hobson's three-run double keyed a six-run first linning off Nolan Ryan to lead the Boston Red Sox and Mike Torrez to a 9-4 victory over the California Angels.

Wayne Gross scored on a late throw by Baltimore first baseman Eddie Murray to break a seventhinning tie and then Derek Bryant singled in another Oakland run to give the A's a 5-3 victory over the Orioles.

Amos Otis singled in a run and scored another to key Kansas City's five-run rally in the sixth inning and the Royals went on to beat the Texas Rangers 10-6.

The Detroit Tigers railied for two runs in the eighth inning on RBI singles by Jason Thompson and Lance Parrish to edge the Chicago

White Sox 5-4.
Butch Wynegar collected three hits — including his third home run in three days — to back the seven-hit pitching of Dave Goltz as the Minnesota Twins beat the Toronto

"COMES a pause in the day's oc-cupation that is known as the children's hour" - unless the pause stretches on and on and on, ceasing to be a pause and becoming the oc-

What happens when the prebedtime story stops being a happy "togetherness" time and becomes a campaign to delay the goodnight moment? Or when second-grade Suzie habitually remembers to do her homework only when the clock shows two minutes before bedtime? Or when three-year-old Moshele. who hates to be left out of anything, insists on making himself a member of the after-dinner party? Or the infant who cries lustily at being put into the crib because he wants to fall asleep only in someone's arms?

Such bedtime shenanigans can (and do) occur in every family. Every child tries some of them sometimes, and some of them do all of them all the time. There is nothing so terrible about this if one is the kind of loving, permissive parent who is genuinely untroubled by this behaviour, and is willing to spend long years catering to his child's desires in this matter.

But I don't know anyone who has so much patience, energy and time.

BEDTIME SHENANIGANS

with demanding or dilatory behaviour patterns until the child is old enough to go to bed when he pleases, then one shouldn't let this hear him cry (or because she is unbehaviour take root in the first place.

It just isn't fair to the child to en-It just isn't fair to the child to encourage him to form habits which must eventually become a point of contention between him and his parent. Especially in dealing with the pre-school child, it isn't the over-indulgence of the over-permissiveness per se which causes problem behaviour (or spoiling); it is allowing of encouraging behaviour that will not be acceptable at a future time, or in other cirat a future time, or in other cir-

IT IS particularly casy for parents to fall into this kind of a bind when it comes to bedtime activities. Normally a time for a story, a initially or a cuddle, it is natural for a child to want to prolong this moment. Even an infant will resist being but down and, because mother doesn't want to ing to go to bed.

certain as to what the crying meana), picks him up again.

But, as in all things, one must find a reasonable limit; if not, then long before that first birthday it becomes clear to everyone but the parent thatthis child is exercising the right of choice -- his choice. He chooses to be held (and why not?) and the parent is perfectly willing to accede to this desire because he doesn't anticipate that in a very short time he (the parent) may tire of this game.

In infancy it's a pleasure to hold him. By age two, he's a pain in the neck if he needs to be rocked or sung to sleep, and by age four (when even mama thinks he's old enough to know better) he's capable of being devious or outright hostile in refus-

No parent deliberately sets out to create an aura of confrontation with his child. On the contrary — especially around the bedtime ehaviour — a parent strives for a calm, friendly atmosphere, and is therefore perpiexed and frustrated when his youngster consistently balks at going to bed. But if it comes to the point where a hedtime battle is a nightly occurrence, then a parent has two options: live with it in silence for many years as it takes the child to learn better; or decide on corrective measures - and stick to them. It sounds glib (and easy on paper), but any parent knows that it is dif-ficult, and the older the child the more difficult it will be to change an established pattern.

NO ONE likes to hear a child cry, and with a pre-verbal infant there is always the possibility that he may really be in pain. But if you decide that the only sensible thing to do is to let the child "cry it out" for a couple of nights, then a parent must not give in. The rule is simple: never reward unwanted behaviour.

If you reward the crying after 10 minutes, you will encourage him to cry for an even longer period the next time. If one suspects that a child really needs attention, pick him up the instant he starts to cry. By the same token, a child awakening from sleep should be attended before he starts to scream for atten-

The message to the child is that he will be cared for but not because he screams. "Crying it out" is harder on parents than on children, but a parent who sticks to his guns (and is bonest about using the clock) will notice a decrease in crying time every night.

Far more difficult is the older child who becomes highly skilled at inventing delaying tactics — thirst, bathroom needs, self-inflicted wounds, imaginary security. These are among the most prossic. A parent needs to be even more inventive than the child in thinking up ways in which to enforce his rules.

But whatever form of friendly persussion is selected, it should be applied with firmness and consistency. When a mother says to me, "I never have an evening to myself — I can never invite people in for the evening — I can't..." then I believe that she not only deserves what she gets, but is enjoying it, too.

BEDTIME battles are more a nuisance than a problem. It is the sort of thing that both parents and children outgrow with time. But occasionally the techniques learned in this bothersome bedtime behaviour carry over into other spheres.

For example, a child learns to get his way by feigning illness or discovering that his parents have a very low noise threshold. Or a parent is amazed at the immediate results achieved by a spanking or even a threat of a spanking.

When one is successful with a given technique, it is tempting to employ the same tool in other situations as well. But, since no one would knowingly choose to live in a battle zone, the fewer battle techniques used the healthier the family. Such techniques tend to be manipulative and aggressive (when clinicians say "battle techniques" they are being quite literal) and are to be avoided as much as possible. I think the implications are clear. Family patterns vary from the permissive to the rigidly structured what is seen as a problem in one home would be considered a nuisance in another.

What is universal in all this is that no one in his right mind would deliberately create a problem where

On the other hand, one must be aware of one's own capacity to put up with nuisances. Anyone who allows a child to make a nuisance of himself and then punishes him for this at a later date is guilty of irresponsible behaviour. And that makes for problems.

YOUNG ISRAELIS with musical talent or with experience in acting or film-making — amateurs included will be eligible for a professional audition in Tel Aviv this month.

The talent hunt opened at the Allenby Cinema in Tel Aviv earlier this month, and successful candidates will be signed on to take part in what the producers - Cosmos Film Ltd. and Jerusalem Capital Studios claim will be the first film in which all participants, on both sides of the camera, will be children aged 12 to

The film is to be a major Israeli contribution to International Children's Year in 1980. The project is being undertaken in cooperation with the Israeli ICY committee, and copies of the film, which is to be shot in Jerusalem and the Sinai, are to be issued in Hebrew and English. The film is budgeted at $500,000, donated by Leon Tamman, a British investor and philanthropist. Beside extensive business interests in Britain, Europe and the U.S., Tamman owns the Daniel Towers Hotel in Herzliya and is a co-founder of Cosmos Film and Jerusalem Capital Studios along with Eddie Soffer, former Israel TV newsman. The co-founders are also co-

producers of the film, whose central theme is a chance meeting in Jerusalem between two boys — one Jewish and the other a Beduin—and the developing friendship between them which is sealed in the course of a "maturity test" they undergo in

The scenario for the film, introduced at a press conference in the Jerusalem Plaza Hotel last week by Dan Gordon, productions manager of the two Israel-based companies. was written by two teenagers, Shahar Segal and Dori Glass. At 15, Shahar is backed by three years' experience in TV film-making, and is director of the pop-ular children's programme, "Quiet! Broadcast Under Way."

The two boys have also been delegated to find an Arab lad for the joint leading role. They have been studying Beduin life from books, interviews with experts on the subject, and films, and are shortly to go on a scouting tour in Sinai for a suitable

But figures of organizational membership are misleading, Primor asserts. "If you add up all the members of the various Jewish and Zionist organizations in France, the total is much larger than it really is. The reason is that the same people are members in the various organizations.'

A gradual decentralization of French cultural and social life lends hope to Primor's task of increasing Jewish activism. "In the past, Jews

They will set up centres of Zionist action all over the Paris suburbs and the provincial towns that will become a new pro-Israel infrastructure," he says.

When Primor finishes his assignment in two years or so, he will be able to gauge his success "by assessing the weight of the Jewish community in France — by how much their participation in national and Jewish life increases." Increased aliya from France will be Primor's

ON A CHILLY Jerusalem evening. in the ruins of a fortress built by Jewish kings, an international crowd followed the enactment of a Greek tragedy performed by an American company — in the original Greek.

"The Trojan Women," Euripides' story of the destruction of Troy and the abduction of the city's women, was performed by the New York La Mama group, as part of the Jerusalem Spring Festival, as an "epic opera," a joint creation by director Andrei Serban and composer Elizabeth Swados. .

The action took place in various parts of the citadel's vast area, on the ground and on the ramparts, and the audience was saked, literally, to follow it - something that called for considerable physical effort and skill and even involved the danger of fall-ing into one of the many holes in the ground, (though as far as I could see,

I have yet to form an opinion on the merits of seeing a performance under such conditions, apart from the obvious advantage of physical exercise. I have still to decide whether the sense of being part of the action is not offset by the distraction involved in picking one's way in the darkness.

'THE TROJAN Women' is probably the most powerful of all the Greek tragedies, which are all more powerful than anything written later. No greater suffering was ever experienced than that of Hecuba, who saw her husband and all her sons killed and her daughter ab-

No more tragic scene was ever conceived than the parting of Andromache from her little Astyanas before the enemy took him away to be killed. And no greater torture and humiliation was inflicted on woman than that suffered by Helen, "the most beautiful and most dangerous woman in the world," who was spattered with mud, raped by men and an animal, before her beautiful head was severed. Elizabeth Swados' music consists mainly of percussion, the drums and bells punctuating and underscoring the action, the performers chanting through proceedings which are ritualistic but nevertheless loaded

There are scenes of almost unearable intensity, like the rape of Helen, and Andromache's long, slow ritual of parting from her son. And there are scenes of visual beauty like the slow-motion, dreamlike descent of a woman into the hold of a ship. her body gliding down the ramp with awesome grace; or the closing scene, with the boat carrying the Trojan women into slavery swaying in the sea, the boat indicated mainly by projections suggesting prows.

In a large cast there is not a single poor performance, and there are stunning performances by Priscilla Smith as Andromache, Mimi Locadio and Jane Lind as Hecuba, Joanna Peled as Helen.

THE SAME actresses and a contingent of male performers appear in "Electra." the third of the Andrei Serban "trilogy" (something of a misnomer, since there is no direct thematic connection binding this play with "The Trojan Women" and "Medea"). "Electra." based on the Sophocles' tragedy, is billed here as a "miracle play," and is performed in a strictly ritualistic and rather low-key manner compared to the

Here, as in the other two plays, the central character is a woman. Electra is possessed by a consuming passion, her desire to avenge the death of her father, the King of Mycenae, murdered by her mother Clytemnestra, and the latter's lover Aegisthus, who now wears the crown. It is Orestes, Electra's brother, who in fact wreaks the vengeance she desires and restores order to the kingdom, leaving her safe under the protection of the spirit of their father that has been guiding his actions all along.

PRISCILLA SMITH plays Electra with the same explosive, snarling passion we saw her display in "Medea," but is slightly subdued here, in a play which speaks of order and the supremacy of reason over emotion, and she is supported by Patrick Burke as Orestes.

This play is performed in a small space, most of it on a raised platform, where the celebrated recognition scene between brother and sister and the murder-execution of Aegisthus take place. The latter, as well as the killing of Clytemnestra, which is performed high on a rampart, has the slow, ballet-like quality which emphasizes its divine inspira-

Banks increase competition for savers' money

By Joseph Morgenstern Post Finance Reporter

TEL AVIV. - The country's commercial banks which offer savings schemes to the public do not release reports on overall sales of such schemes. Yet a recently released report by the Bank of Israel, which outlines the volume of new indexlinked bonds, which are government approved for savings schemes, shows that since the second quarter of 1978 sales of bonds have been on

In that quarter savings schemes bought a total of ILS.6b. worth of linked bonds. In the first quarter of 1979 the figure was IL1.7b. The drop of sales was about 58 per cent over a period of less than one year. National Consultants offers a number of explanations for these figures, including:

 A relatively low level of redemptions of older scheme New programmes offered in 1979. which allowed the savers to continue existing schemes. · Under new programmes banking institutions must buy a certain proportion of negotiable bonds and such purchases have been made on the open market.

 Savers are showing a preference for direct investment in index-linked bonds, and on the open market. It seems that the last-mentioned reason may be the key to understanding the overall picture. Savings schemes have a number of clearcut advantages. First, they offer the highest yield in any of the currently issued index-linked bonds. The grants offered to savers give the programmes an extra sales appeal. Yet a saver, to get the full benefits of the savings scheme, must freeze his money for the full six-year period. A cancellation generally results in the loss of the initial grant. To achieve the full tax exemption feature, the scheme must be held for at least three years.

The most popular savings scheme currently offered is the "Until 120." This scheme allows for either monthly or a one-time deposit. Initially the country's commercial banks offered a 14 per cent outright grant to savers. The Tefahot Mortgage Bank countered with an 18 per cent grant. Not to be outdone, the First International Bank of Israel earlier this month made a special offer, good for three weeks, which entitles savers to a grant of 20 per FIBI's offer means that customers, with an average annual index rise of 25 per cent, would receive a linked annual yield of nearly 4 per cent.

Union Bank of Israel, during May, is offering a 21 per cent grant, making this scheme easily the most attractive form of long-term saving.
The government has approved a maximum bonus of 22 per cent for the month of May. The competition for the public's funds by the commercial banks can only be good news for the individual

West European countries, he said. The law provides for a maximum of a IL12,000 fine and six months' imprisonment. But so far the courts had not meted such punishment, he said. He cited as an example a Tel Aviv foreman who was respon for the deaths of four builders, but was fined only ILA,000.

He also complained that government supervisors who enforce safety regulations are too lax. In 1977 there were 75,190 work accidents in which 90 people were killed and 3,050 maimed for life, but only 11 charge sheets were presented to the courts, another 100 while commuting, and 3,-100 will be crippled for life, Ben-

Exporting data processing

By MACABEE DEAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - The Yaana data processing company has reached an export agreement with Prof. Paul Fisher, one of the owners of Computer Science of Kansas, who is also head of the Faculty of Computer Sciences at the University of Kansas City. In announcing this yesterday, Etraim Shabtai, general manager of Yaàna, stated that the export agreement would run into about $1.5m. over the next few years.

Fisher will work out the systems analysis needed to solve a specific problem, and Yaana will work out the actual programming.

Meir Zorea, head of sales at Yaana, noted that such work not only has a one hundred per cent added value, but that for the Americans, and others, it was 40 per cent cheaper to do it in Israel, "since our wages are low while our skills are the best in the world."

The company, founded in 1963, is today one of the largest in Israel. Its turnover in 1978 was IL45m., which according to Shabtai shows a 90 per cent inflationary growth, or a 40 per cent real growth. Yaana employs 90

firm's affiliates, Micro-Daf, noted that "reducing one kilogram of figures on paper to a piece of film weighing one gram" paid for itself in one to three months "Paper itself is highly expensive and growing more expensive year by year. Not only do we save huge quantitles of space, but the price of microfilming a kilogram of paper, instead of printing the paper again, comes to about one-quarter to onethird of the cost of the actual paper itself." Each company buys a machine, costing up to IL10,000, to read the micro-film.

Micro-Daf works straight from the computer, thus eliminating the need to print the information, or photograph it.

At present it works for several government agencies, including the security forces, National Insurance, banks, pension funds, hospitals, universities and the schools.

"Absolute secrecy is guaranteed." Meshel promised, adding that "the banks we work for demand just as much secrecy as does the security establishment."

Yaana is a private company owned in equal shares by five partners. It plans to move into new 1,400 sq.m. quarters in a short time.

Arkia manager, board chairman, resign

By BARUCH SAVILLE TEL AVIV. — The general manager of Arkia, Israel Roth, has resigned from his post, together with the air-line's board chairman, Mordechai Ben-Ari.

Although Roth has declined to make any comment, it is understood that his resignation is mainly in protest against government plans for the airline's future.

Ben-Ari's resignation was foreseen, following a statement by the Prime Minister that Transport Minister Haim Landau had decided to oust El Al from Arkia's manage-

Aluf (Res.) Benyamin Peled, who is now managing director of Eibit. Ehud Shilo, director-general of the Transport Ministry, and businessman Meir Halevy, to the Arkia board. It is understood that this would be

Israel Roth remains firm in his conviction that unless Arkia is expanded to include the short "local"

Business centre slated for Ramat Aviv 'Gimel'

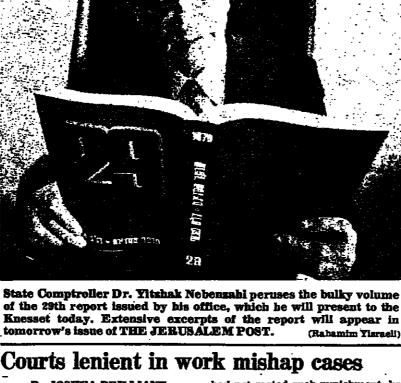

Jerusalem Post Reporter TEL AVIV. - The Africa-Israel Investment Company, a Bank Leumi subsidiary, is investing ILi5m. in building a commercial centre in Ramat Aviv "Gimel." Part of the centre will house a 550-square-metre Supersol supermarket, and the rest of the 1,400 sq.m. area will be used for a bank and shops.

At present, the company is building 400 flats nearby (of which 72 are for young couples), and plans to start building another 200 flats, of four or five rooms, within a short time.

TENSE LINES. - The Electric Corporation has begun erecting poles for two high-tension lines which will be strung to the airfields being built by the Americans near Yotvata and Mitzpe Ramon, it was announced justice minister was considering the mendation favourably. "I saw my husband at Ramle Prison on Friday and he was sure that he would enjoy some form of reduction in the light of the special circumstances of his case. This will come as a terrible blow and disappointment to him," she said. It has been reliably learned that Tamir told at least one of the people who interceded on Tzur's behalf that they should organize political sup-port for a favourable decision.

Asher Yadlin was sentenced to five years for embezzlement in 1977. A committee recommended that his sentence be reduced by ten months. but Tamir also rejected this for reasons of public policy.

He emphasized that imprisonment also had a deterrent effect and that this had to be upheld. If Yadiin has his sentence reduced by a third by the pardons board for good behaviour, he will be released early next year. David Peled, former director of the Customs and Excise Department, sentenced to five years for accepting bribes, did not earn a recommendation from the committee which examined his file. Ya'acov Cohen was serving an 18year term for robbery. He is being treated for severe kidney failure and receives dialysis treatment two to three times a week. He will be released within the next few days. President Navon showed particular interest in this case.

The amnesty committees did not recommend that the sentences of Ehud Adiv or Dan Vered, who were sentenced to 17 and 10 years respectively for membership in a Syrian spy ring, be shortened in any way. Among these recommendations still to be finalised are those of Ludvinua Janusen and Terry Fleener, two women sentenced on terror charges. Jannsen, a Dutch citizen, entering the country on a spying mission for the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Floener, a 24-year-old U.S. stu-dent, was sentenced to five years in 1975 for similar offences. A rough breakdown of those who enjoyed amnesty or sentence reductions follows: Ninety-nine enjoy immediate release (48 of these full amnesty): 169 — reduction of up to one year; 39 - reduction from one to three years; 31 - reduction of more than three years; 52 prisoners sentenced to life will enjoy other alleviations.

The 395 inmates granted freedom or reductions in sentence represent some 20% of the civil prison population. This percentage matches that of those prisoners who were amnestied in 1967 following the Six Day War and did not return to prison. Of those, 11.5 per cent who benefited were first offenders, while the rest were recidivists. Tamir emphasized that all committee members, as well as other authorities, opposed proposals for a general amnesty to mark the peace vith Egypt. But he revealed that the Ministerial Legislation Committee would shortly be tabling a proposal that would grant full rehabilitation to offenders who completed their sentences by Independence Day 15 rears ago and had not returned to a life of crime. These people could now apply, with some exceptions, for exployment in the civil service, and their criminal past would, in effect, be forgotten.

JUDY SIEGEL adds: In a meeting with members of the amnesty committees at Beit Hanassi yesterday, Navon praised the committee members for their diligence and dedication in the face of hundreds of often "depressing and difficult cases." Asked by the president about the sources of crime, former Supreme Court justice Benzion Shereshevsky asserted that one important factor dates back to the early years of the state when many tens of thousands of youngsters from abroad were ab-

"The (political) parties divided up the youngsters and sent them to the institutions they favoured, without first studying their backgrounds and views." he said. Youngsters from religious families were sent, according to party distribution, to secular institutions. "They lost their respect for their parents and began to denigrate them. When the parties finally realized what they had done, it was too late," Shereshevsky said.

BEGIN BLASTS DEFENCE

Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon, are seeking a stronger and more explicit assertion that the ultimate legal source of authority for the autonomy resides in Israel than the mere implication of this contained in the word "withdrawn." (Israel insisted at Camp David on "withdrawn" rather than "abolished" in order to protect the residual legal authority of the military government as the source of power for the autonomy.)

There is also no mention of the holy places in Jerusalem in the revamped plan. Article 25 of the original 26-point plan guaranteed freedom of access to the holy places. Informed sources explained that, following Camp David, the autonomy plan is seen by all parties as transitional and therefore there is no need to mention Jerusalem's holy places since the entire issue of Jerusalem was left open at Camp David.

The premier's plan reiterates his original proposals regarding the modalities for establishing the autonomy: free, secret, universal suffrage with an 18-year minimum age for voters and a 25-year minimum age for candidates to an eleven-man autonomous council. The "modalities" are to be the Israel-Egypt autonomy talks begin.

The plan also reiterates the option to be given to West Bankers and Gazans to choose either Israeli or Jordanian citizenship, with the concomitant rights to vote for the respective parliaments. Those choosing Israeli citizenship, the plan states, will have the right to buy land and settle in Israel proper.

The revamped proposal ends with two declarative statements that are not technically part of the proposals: That there will be no independent Palestinian state, and that Israel will demand sovereignty over the areas at the end of the five-year transition period.

In the original 26-point plan Israel "stood by its rights and its claim of sovereignty," but proposed "for the sake of the agreement and of that the sovereignty question be left open.

A cabinet source explained last night that the declarative assertion of the intention to claim sovereignty (not, it will be noted, to apply it unilaterally) is intended to prod the Palestinians to accept the autonomy as a transitional solution, and to come up with acceptable compromise ideas - not a demand for a separate state — once the talks on the areas' final status get under way in three years' time.

No confidence justified

IT IS DIFFICULT to recall another instance in which a motion of no confidence in the government, in the most literal sense of the term, was as justified as the motion to be debated in the Knesset today on the freeing of 76 convicted terrorists in exchange for a kidnapped Israeli soldier.

The motion tabled by the Labour Alignment and by Shai is admittedly a political one. Nevertheless the entire nation cannot refrain from expressing a lack of confidence in the judgement of its leaders in deciding to free convicted mass murderers for whose capture Israeli soldiers have paid with their lives.

As reprehensible as the bad judgement evinced was the apparent collusion to keep the details of the swap away from the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee. This attempted cover-up is what led to the deal, concluded in March, becoming a cause celebre only in May, after PLO sources revealed those details this week.

The calculated withholding of information on the identity of the freed terrorists in itself constitutes an admission on the part of the authorities of the mistake they had committed. The prisoners swap undermines one of the linchpins of Israeli policy towards PLO terror in the face of repeated attempts to seize Israeli hostages to force the freeing of imprisoned terrorists.

No small number of Israeli hostages have been killed or wounded in maintaining an excruciatingly difficult but essential policy of not giving in to such terrorist demands and blackmail. The entire rationale of that policy has now been placed in question by this decision. The most trenchant criticism of the government's step came in the Knesset Monday from the chairman of the coalition's NRP faction, Dr. Yehuda Ben-Meir. He declared the "wretched" decision to release the terrorists to be "one of the government's biggest mistakes" and a "terrible stain" on its

The enormity of the original decision was highlighted all the more in the releasing of the details only ten days after the brutal terrorist action in Nahariya. In that action, a father and his two young daughters were killed in an attempt to prevent their being taken hostage to force the release of additional terrorists. Prime Minister Begin reacted to that tragic event by demanding the death sentence for especially brutal terrorist killers. Squaring such an attitude with Mr. Begin's central role in freeing the 76 terrorists defies comprehension.

There are broader questions that must be considered in the light of this affair. Mr. Begin, during his two years in office, has displayed a not infrequent tendency to such aberrant lack of judgement, beginning with the decision to pardon Israel's biggest embezzler, Yehoshua Bension, for personal and political

The failure of the majority of the Cabinet to keep Mr. Begin's penchant for such wrong judgements in check is a source of serious concern.

REVISED FAMILY PLANNING

With Israelis living longer than ever before, the risks of old-age loneliness should motivate couples to have large families, writes BINYAMIN ENGLMAN.

ISRAEL, like the U.S., Britain and several European countries, has been experiencing a steady decline in its birth-rate over the past few decades. The drop in Jewish births in Israel has not been as severe as that of the general populations in the West, but it has been sharp enough to put it just above "replacement level."

The reasons for the decline here are most or less the same as they are in the West: economic pressures. changing marriage and divorce patterns, the desire of women for careers, the growth of birth-control devices, and so on.

If Israelis are concerned at all about the drop in Jewish births, it is usually because of the demographic problem presented by the much higher birth-rate among local Moslems. But I should like to con-sider the matter — and to argue for a higher Jewish birth-rate - from an entirely different point of view. Let us consider some statistics from the opposite end - those deal-THE MEAN length of life in Israel in cupations and interests.

This situation forms the subject of Haim Hazaz's short story, "Another generation," in his book "Bell and Pomegranate." He describes the disorientation of a man as he goes into retirement and the tension the new situation brings into his relations with his wife.

Loneliness in old age...a modern problem becoming increasingly

In truth, from a strictly statistical angle, the predicament of the average retiree is going to be much worse than in Hazaz's story, since he is likely to be much lonelier.

The reason is that while the lifespan of either spouse is indeed going to average about 74 years, they are unlikely to reach this age together. One spouse is likely to outlive the most sensitive to civil en-

other and spend the remainder of his life in utter loneliness. The expected period of widowhood is over 20 years (again more for the female, who is also generally younger than her pariner, less for the male).

Old age means extremely hard years of physical and frequently mental decline, not unaptly nicknamed a "second childhood." One is in acute need of being close to one's closests and who be these if not one's children if there are any.

WHAT THEY can give in these years, no one else can give. Money can help, arrangements between neighbours can mitigate problems. old-age homes exist. But the feeling of loneliness is dissolved only by being part (if only a passive one) of a

Naturally one does not like to be a burden to anyone, not even to one's kin, and practical arrangements which are frequently a function of money need to be thought of to avoid this. But pity the one who cuts himself off from his own family for this reason and doubly pity the one who has done so irrevocably in his early years in the misguided name of "sensible family planning."

Such family planning may of course include one or two children, but these may not be available when needed. They may be abroad, they may be unwilling or for some reason incapable of looking after their old parent. There may also be statistically significant fluctuations which make the children die before

Thus take the case of children born when their parent is 28 years of age and calculate the chances of their deceasing before their progenitor reaches 75. For one child to die the probability is over 20 per cent; for children in a two-child situation the chances are 5 per cent and even with three children one can only be 99 per cent sure to have a child about when one reaches 75 years of age.

Dry Bones

Wednesday, May 9, 1979

Thus, the extra and tragically unborn child is the one who might have made the parent's final years tolerable, giving and repaying comfort, warmth and love.

Let us recognize that to a large extent this is a modern problem getting increasingly more acute, as due to improved medical conditions, etc. longevity increases. The mean length of life in our country has increased from 61 in 1930 to its present figure of about 74, adding from the point of view of loneliness 18 problematic (though otherwise welcome) years to man's life.

In those bygone days when a man's life drew to a close shortly after his reproductive years, when he shut his eyes with his offsprings tottering around him, he surely had no need to forestall his last-years loneliness.

In another area of changes in our living conditions, which is at least symbolic, in 1955 about five times as many one-room flats were built as four-room or larger flats; in 1977 the ratio is 15 — but the other way round The average retiree lives nowadays in a much larger average flat and a feels all the more lost and lonesome

BY FOCUSING on old-age forlornness, we are saying the following to young people of the pre-sent generation: Think about your future, choose your own good, plin for the long rum. Four or more children may be a difficulty initially, but what comfort they will be during your last 20 years.

This call may sound like an advertisement for a profitable investment or for a life-insurance. However, family planning may be considered just such a thing...

The second worry is that, although invitations to the exhibition and sale are being sent out to international dealers and collectors, many of the paintings will not re-emerge from private collections in Saudi Arabia.

THE EPIDEMIC OF STRIKES

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir,- For a man who arrives in Israel with the desire to take part in the building of the Jewish state, the most distressing feature of life here is the predilection of Israelis for strikes and sanctions.

The existence of strikes was not a revelation for me when I arrived here: even in the USSR, I had heard enough about the ways of free society. What impresses me in Israel is the thoughtless easiness with which people proclaim strikes, their people proclaim strikes, their readiness to strangle all society for the sake of receiving a few hundred pounds more, and their complete disregard of the notion of service and devotion—the noblest heritage of the founders of our state. The strikes are proclaimed on any pretext almost immediately negotiations are started and nobody takes into account their harmful and destructive effects. Not only does the epidemic of strikes cause damage to our international prestige, but we slide into degradation and begin to lose our own self-respect.

I think some legal measures are ecessary to create a new atmosphere. One such measure may be the limitation of the dictatorial power of the Histadrut to proclaim strikes without consulting those in-VITALY RUBIN

DENTAL CARE IN ISRAEL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, - This is in response to a stimulating article on dental care in Israel, and a letter to the editor, which recently appeared and pointed out problems of providing dental

Although I have taught blochemistry and chemical pathology to dental students, my primary interest is as a patient. Recently I received a dental bill which appeared to have been calculated on the basis of about IL1,-400 (or $70) per hour. His fees, the dentist assured me, were approved by the dental association. When I pointed out that these shamefully high fees make it extremely difficult for anyone earning an Israeli salary to provide dental care for his family, the dentist said frankly: "I don't give a damn what you think." He need not concern himself, since dental care is in demand, and post-poning or ignoring dental treatment isn't an acceptable alternative.

In the long run, we need a programme of prepaid dental in-surance, managed either through ex-isting health funds or in some other framework. Such a system would require additional dentists to staff it, and these must be obtained by expanding the Israeli dental schools and/or paying stipends to qualified students studying dentistry abroad, providing that they commit themselves to staff the sick fund

PIGEON POST?

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, - Your readers may be interested to know that, on October 5. 1978, I posted a letter in Haifa addressed to Tel Aviv. It was received on March 13, 1979, after 150 days. A reply was sent to me on the same day, and it arrived here on April 7. 45 days later. But then, during the return trip, the post office workers were on partial strike.

I have the original stamped envelopes to confirm my story.

Sir, - The death penalty for terrorists committing especially in-human crimes has lately been debated ardently with public opinion divided on the subject. The demand for swift and adequate punishment for such crimes is fully justifiable and cannot be countered by the allegedly does not exist in other enlightened countries. This is not true. Death sentences are passed from time to time in France for ordinary crimes and in the United States, the death penalty is statutory in a number of states, although no executions have been carried out recently. As for the U.S.S.R. and other "progressive" countries, not only does the penal code provide for the death penalty, but it has been

Unless and until summary executions of sentences passed by military tribunals are instituted sentencing terrorists to death would not serve its purpose and would only make martyrs of abject criminals.

There is, however, another punishment which would be commensurate with the crime committed and would not expose our country to international pressures and criticism. Terrorists who have committed to hard labour for life under a strict penitentiary regime. This prospect
